THERE WAS A SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA:

Name _____

Room Number _____

The players in the orchestra had fun making music together. They loved to play their music for children. One day, the children came to hear the music. They wanted to know all about the instrument.

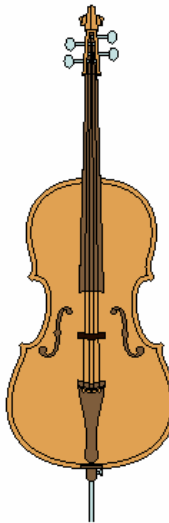

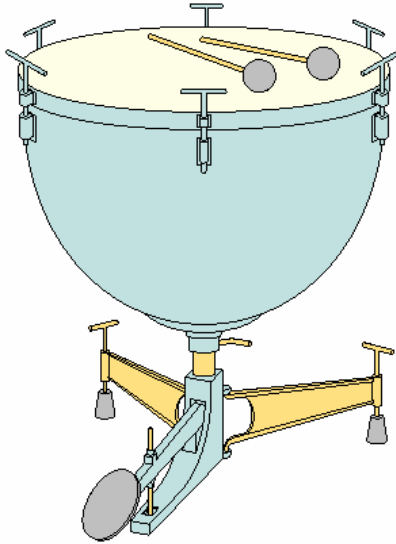

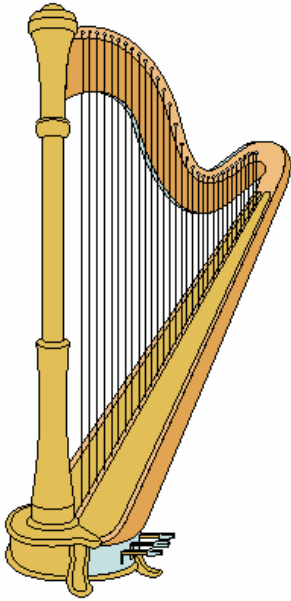

Draw a picture of the children. Don't forget to put you in the picture.....

They met the leader of the orchestra who is called The Conductor or The Maestro (pronounced MY-STROH). The conductor holds a small stick to lead the orchestra. It is called a baton. The conductor uses the baton to keep the players together when they play.

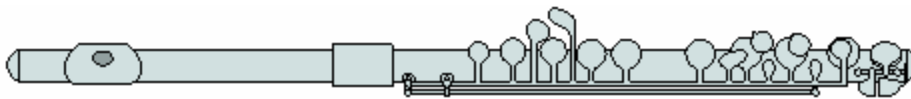

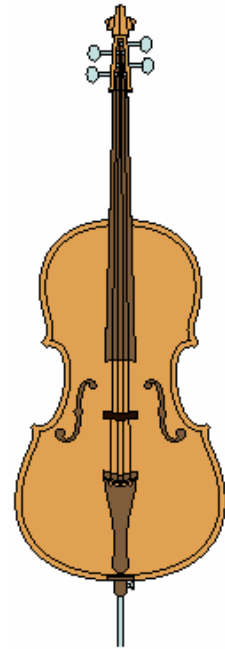

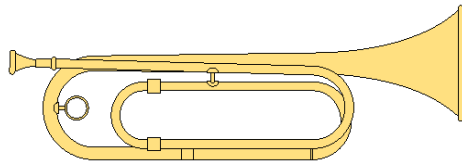

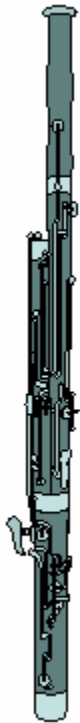

Draw a picture of the conductor holding the baton in one hand. The conductor usually wears black clothes.

The children found out about the four groups of instruments in the orchestra. The first group was the string instruments.

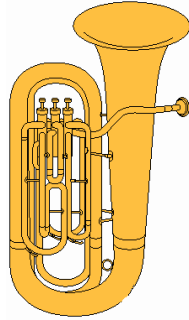

Circle the instruments that have strings.

The second group of instruments the children found out about was the woodwind family. Long ago, all the instruments in this group were made of wood. Today, the flute is sometimes made of silver or gold, and many woodwind instruments have metal parts.

Draw a circle around the woodwind instruments.

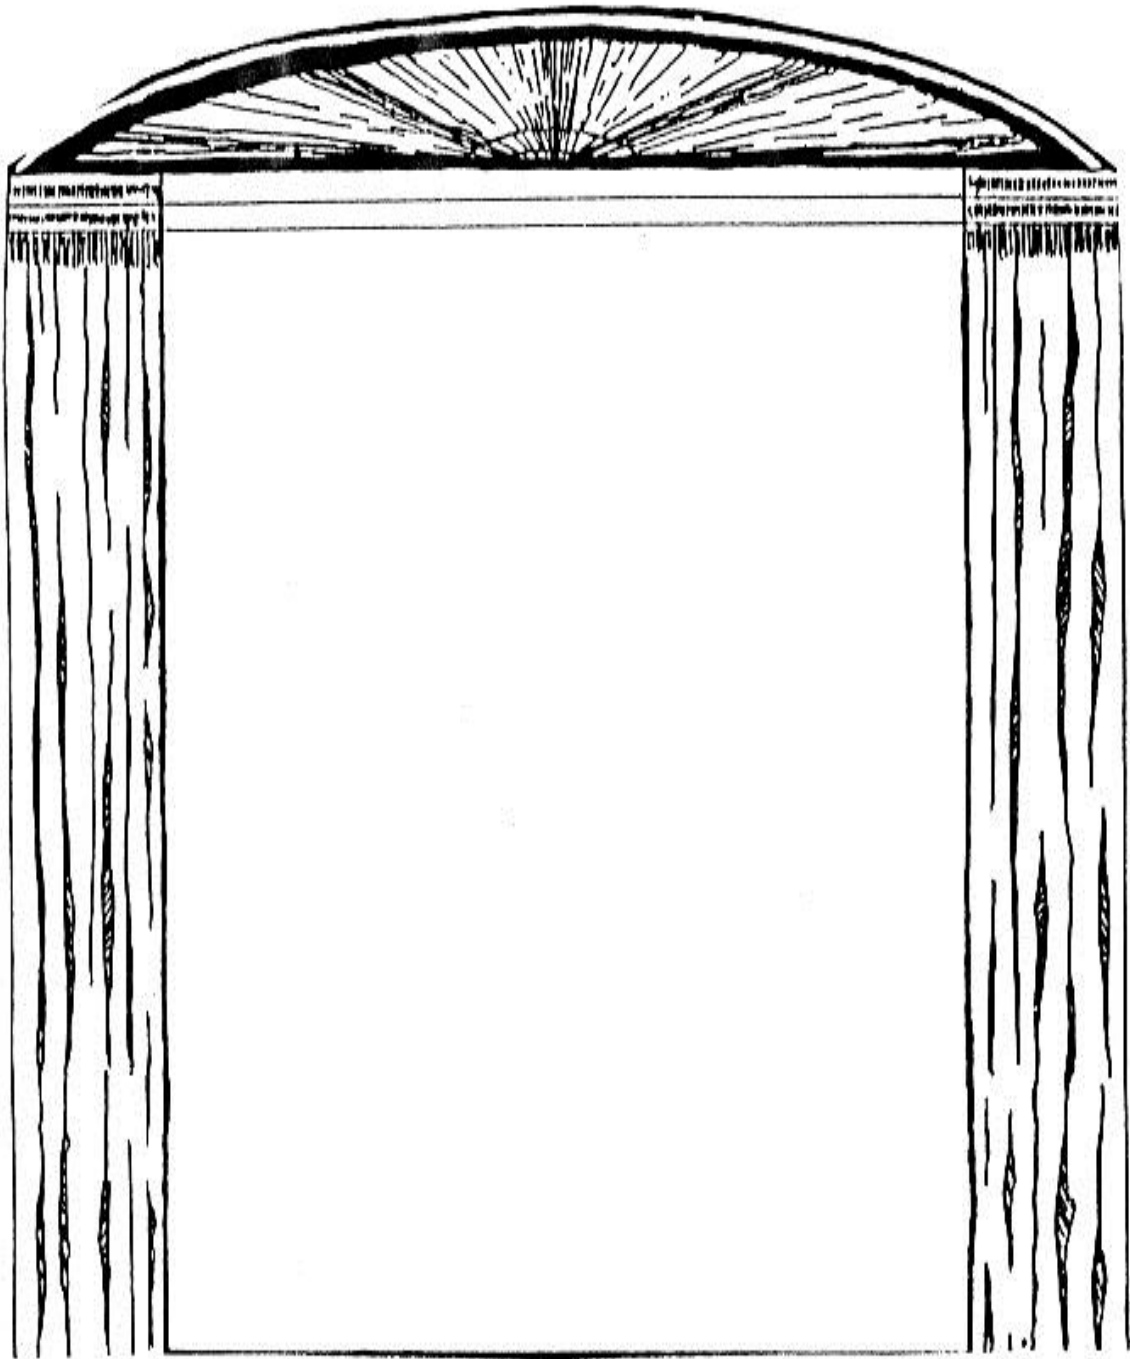

The third group of instruments the children learned about was the brass group. Brass instruments are horns. The players all blow air in the mouthpiece to make the musical sound.

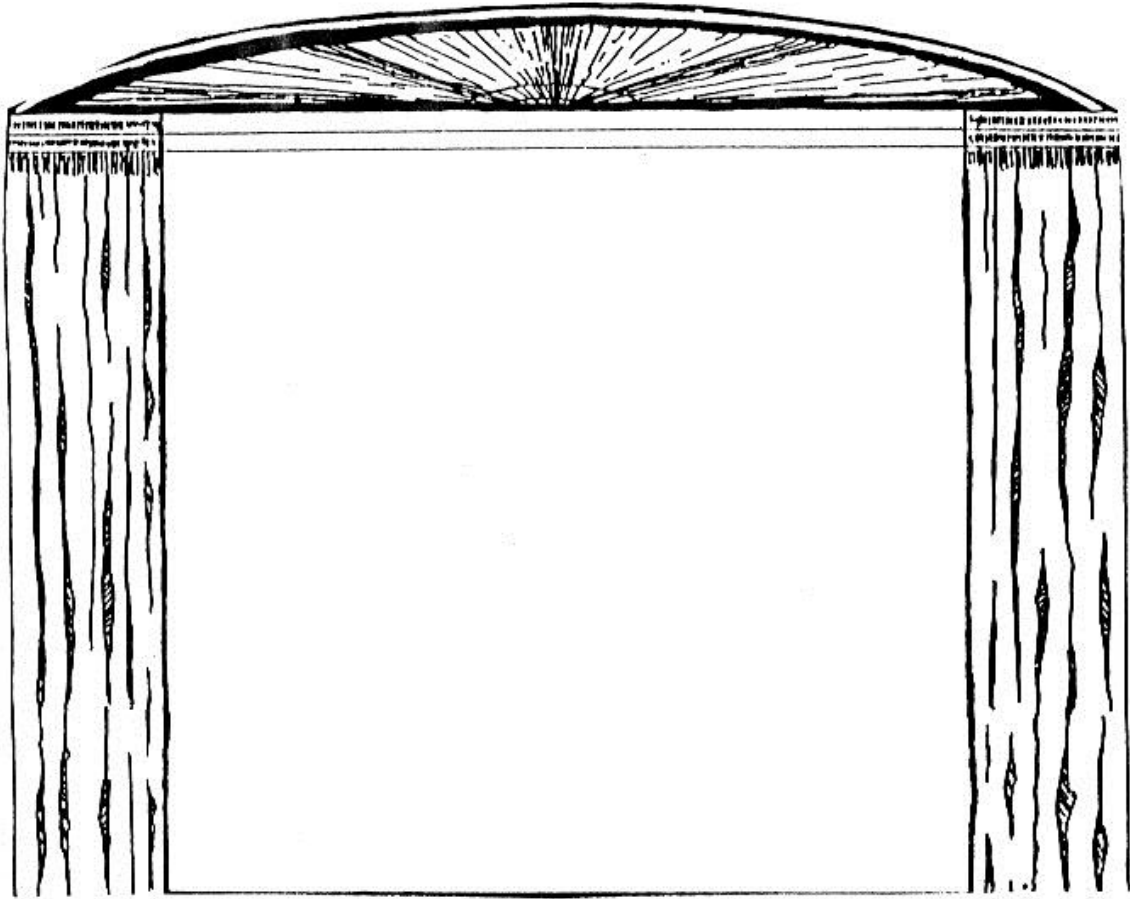

Draw a picture of a brass instrument. Color it yellow.

A large, empty rectangular box with a black border, intended for a child to draw a picture of a brass instrument. The box is currently blank.

The last group of instruments the children learned about was the percussion family. The instruments in this group are usually hit or shaken. They are fun to play.

Draw a picture of you playing a percussion instrument.
